GEARY AND GARDNER.

From the N. Y. World. The certainty of Geary's defeat for re-election as Governor of Pennsylvania should not let the people of that State from the contemplation of what a bungling and burglarious being he is. In a radicalism of which...

That Geary can write his name is solely inferable from the fact that he has never "made his mark." But that he can or does write his messages is not maintainable. When in Kansas, he most assuredly stole them. Since he has been in Pennsylvania he most probably has hired the preparation of them.

And the man who, from the intrinsic character of the documents, and from the eternal fitness of things, could not certainly have been bought for this business, is Kemble, ex-State Treasurer. However that may be, we invite attention to what are below printed in parallel columns—extracts from Governor Geary's inaugural address to the Legislature of the Territory of Kansas in 1857 and the inaugural address of Governor Henry J. Gardner to the Legislature of Massachusetts two years before, in 1855.

EXTRACT FROM GOV. HENRY J. GARDNER'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS DELIVERED TO THE LEGISLATURE OF MASSACHUSETTS, JANUARY 9, 1855. Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives: That gratings being, in those hands are alike the enemies of individuals and of nations, has permitted you to assemble this day, entrusted with grave responsibilities, and charged with grave duties.

There follows more of the same palpable literary thieving. Robbery would be the better term, because it is larceny accompanied with violence. Geary not only stole Gardner's sentiments, but he put just such a Geary twist on them as belated them with his dreary sense without destroying the identity of the passage. The Pennsylvanian doubles the compliment to the Deity in place of the single tribute of the Massachusetts Executive.

Justice probably is eternal. It has been twelve years, however, coming round to catch Geary, as witness to-day's exposure of this sorry plagiarism. As for principles, which he also distils with immortality, we leave this exhibition of the sort he had in Kansas in '57 to the calm consideration of honest Pennsylvanians of '69.

THE TRIUMPH OF THE FRANCO-AMERICAN TELEGRAPH CABLE.

From the N. Y. Herald. It is a matter of national congratulation that the landing of the Franco-American cable has at last been permitted by the Government at Washington. The grant, however, seems not to have been a free-will offering by the power elected by the people to guard their rights and expand their commercial and political interests, but to have been wrung from that power by an overwhelming popular voice, emanated and developed by the expressions of the public press. Besides, we also from a Washington correspondent that the attempts to hamper the movements of the Franco-American Company in their efforts to land their cable on American shores were conceived in the spirit of a well-known Washington lobby operation, which cannot but be regarded as only little less than criminal.

OUR SHAMEFUL PERSECUTION OF THE CUBANS. From the N. Y. Sun. Can General Grant be aware of the atrocities committed under color of his authority against the Cubans in this vicinity? Moderation towards an enemy has never been the practice of the Spaniards; but it is a novelty to see them enlist the civil officers and military forces of the United States for the perpetration of their outrages.

not have paused a moment in their great undertaking. They might have gone on with their work, brought their cable into the harbor of New York, carried the shore end up to the city and fastened it to the pillars of the City Hall, without, in the present era of civilization and enlightenment, encountering any just opposition from the Government or people. As Americans, progressive above all other nations in this marvellous age of progress, our people would have hailed such an event with joy and satisfaction. And as for the pother and log-rolling business in Massachusetts, about forming a company under the authority of the Legislature to facilitate the landing of the cable in the town of Duxbury, in that State, or three marine leagues therefrom, it was not only a miserable dodge of some speculators, but an acknowledgment—one more cordially accepted by the fishing interests of Maine and Massachusetts—that our maritime rights extend only the distance mentioned from our shores—an idea that won no fame for John Quincy Adams when he permitted that restriction to be included in the settlement of the fishing boundaries question at the treaty of Ghent, in 1814, as a compromise for some other concession, although he earned some historical renown for not permitting our Northern fisheries to be abolished altogether upon the demand of the commissioners of Great Britain during the discussions on that treaty.

Briefly, the Franco-American Company have all along acted just as they have had a perfect right to, and the sooner their cable is landed upon our shores the better. The future action of Congress in the premises will not militate against their interests, but, on the contrary, will afford evidence to the world that this is not a nation walled in with barbaric prejudices, but one free and open, and ready to embrace with acclamation every enterprise that tends to enhance its material, its commercial and political interests, come from what quarter it may.

A PHILADELPHIA JUBILEE.

From the N. Y. Tribune. From Philadelphia come rumors of a mighty uproar where it is to be celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of American Independence. The festival is still seven years distant, but Philadelphia is a slow city, and means to have a magnificent affair, and so perhaps the time allowed for preparation is none too much. This is all very well in the abstract, and we do devoutly trust that the 4th of July, 1876, will be celebrated with all possible heartiness in every part of the United States. It is proper, too, that Philadelphia, which witnessed the birth of the American nation, should also be the central point of the festivities which are to illustrate its centennial anniversary. But we protest against absurd imitations of the Boston Jubilee. The two gentlemen, Messrs. L. Engelke and M. Richards Muckle, who announce themselves as the primary committee, and in a letter to General Grant ask his blessing upon the enterprise, we are pained to say are not so well known in New York as some other people, and, for aught we can say, may be demitobies, representing only their ambitious selves; but Philadelphia papers accept them without question, and so we take for granted their official character and their local fame. It is their purpose to have a colossal coliseum in Independence Park, and a musical festival lasting an entire week. The great shed on the Black Bay dwindles to the puny dimensions of a dog-house in comparison with this stupendous Philadelphia structure, which is to hold 100,000 people, and be filled with the music of 12,000 performers.

This, in our opinion, is pushing the jubilee enthusiasm to the point of ridicule. If the success of the Boston experiment is to involve us in a round of musical monstrosities, each successive one bigger than any which went before it, we shall soon come to regard Mr. P. S. Gilmore as an enemy of the human race. Are we to have a perpetual growth of chorus, a constant aggregation of anvils, the marching of interminable firemen, and Hall Columbian getting louder and louder every year? The Quaker City projectors emulate the magician's disciple, who learned how to make a broomstick fetch pails of water, but could not stop it, and was drowned in consequence. Boston went a little too far in the multiplication of harmonies, and where her enterprise was imperfect was precisely where it was biggest. A monster celebration of the American centennial is of course highly proper. We should like, for instance, to hear the Declaration of Independence read in front of Independence Hall by all the members of Congress simultaneously. But we protest against exaggerated musical festivals. You can't enhance the grandeur of a picture by painting it with a whitewash brush.

THE INDIANS.

From the N. Y. Times. If the Indians are not satisfied with us now, they will be a seamy and surly set; they will prize themselves base ingrates—and, for ourselves, there is nothing we resent more in men than ingratitude. Here we are now, offering the redskins, with the greatest impartiality, the olive-branch and the rifle, and leaving them to take their choice. In one hand, we say, we carry the calumet or pipe of peace, in the other the breech-loader; nay, we do better, for while our Colvers in one quarter are teaching the Indians, our Carra and Corses in another are "whopping" them. And it seems to us that this accords with the legend told by the "medals" which we have been in the habit of distributing, it appears to friendly savages. One of them bears, for example, "the hatchet and calumet crossed"—which is expressive of the double diplomacy we sometimes have in Indian affairs. Another shows "one Indian scalping another," and, by contrast, "an Indian at the plough"; just as now some of our Pawnee allies take Sioux scalps, while, hardly, our Quaker allies instruct in the agricultural art.

Seriously speaking, however, this apparent contradiction in our Indian policy is an inevitable one. We have to draw the distinction between the friendly and the hostile Indians, and to play them both at the same time with such "arguments" as are needed. Hence we see the spectacle of news coming the same day from the Indian country of peace negotiations and war trails. That we have been thus far kept from a general Indian war is encouraging, and indeed everything looks very well for the future.

being able to make their way directly to the Republican camps in the interior of the island, they took refuge here until they could have an opportunity of joining the forces of Caspedes and Quesada. Many of them are exceedingly poor, having brought with them nothing but the clothes they had on. But their wealthier countrymen have provided for them as liberally as duty to the cause of their country would allow. They have supplied them with food, lodging, and necessary clothing; and, for the sake of economy, they have bestowed them in numbers together. One of the houses used for this purpose is situated in West Hoboken. Some forty young men lodge there. Their provisions are purchased in quantities; they do their own cooking; they sleep upon straw, like soldiers in camp, each man being supplied with a single blanket. They are perfectly quiet and orderly, and there is no more reason for attacking them than for attacking the same number of peaceful boarders at the Astor House.

The well-paid spies of the Spanish Consul had, however, learned of this little company of patriots, and the Consul at once brought to bear those all-powerful influences by which he controls the action of gentlemen in office here whose names have not heretofore been associated with oppression and outrage committed upon the weak and defenseless. But since the creatures of Spanish despotism have succeeded in perverting the servants of the United States into gendarmes of slavery and the slave trade, we are compelled to witness things which before seemed impossible.

On Monday night, the 19th, General Barlow, the United States Marshal of this district, left this city about midnight. He was attended by three of his deputy marshals and followed by a force of twenty-five marines. Reaching West Hoboken between 1 and 2 o'clock of Tuesday morning, they broke in the doors of the Cuban lodging-house, and kidnapped the whole party. First, the Marshal endeavored to bribe one of the party by the offer of money to betray to him some imaginary deposit of arms. This base offer having been honorably refused, the Marshal demanded what they were doing all together in one house. They were told that they were living there until they could return to Cuba, to fight for their country; and that they were living there, not at the expense of the Cuban Junta, but at that of a benevolent society organized for the purpose. He asked if they practiced military drill, and was told that they did, but that they were not aware that any law of the United States forbade it. Finally, after various questions, General Barlow seeing that his proceeding was without any logical ground whatever, released his captives at Hoboken, whether he had marched them between two files of marines, and they returned to their house. They had endured an outrage for which there is no justification, and which the law ought to punish severely; but, as the victims are foreigners and poor, it is probable that the authors of this wicked deed will escape unharmed.

If President Grant has any justification for ordering or allowing the commission of such wrongs as this which we have now detailed, he will do well to lay it before the public with as little delay as possible. The ancient persecution of fugitive slaves among us, their capture by United States Marshals, and their return to bondage with all the forms of law, are remembered with a disgust and horror which this outrage against these Cuban fugitives of freedom revives and intensifies anew. It is felt that our shame to-day is as great and as shocking as was our shame then; and when we recall the anticipations which attended the beginning of General Grant's administration, the sense of shame becomes something akin to despair.
